

TIDINGS OF ZION

Adar I/Adar II 5773

MT. ZION CONGREGATION, Sioux Falls, South Dakota

March 2014

from Student Rabbi Herman...

The old joke claims that the common theme of every Jewish holiday can be summarized by the statement, “They tried to kill us; we won; let’s eat.” Purim, which falls on March 16 this year, is exemplary of this statement except that drinking and merriment takes the place of eating. Yet while we eat festival meals and enjoy the company of family on every holiday, the stark contrast between the story of Purim and its observance is striking. We mark our survival of an attempted genocide, the near total destruction of our people, by drinking, dressing up in costumes, and making fun of ourselves. To many, this seems strange.

I would like to think that the idea of Purim is the understanding that there is only so much suffering and devastation that one person or one people can take. Jewish history is filled with tragedy and violence, yet if we focus too much on these negatives we succumb to what the Jewish historian Salo Baron called the “lachrymose” conception of Jewish history. Similarly, life has plenty of pain and suffering, yet focus on these negatives leads to hopelessness and misery.

One of my favorite movies of all time is the film Harold and Maude, in which the elder Maude teaches young Harold that one must accept death as part of life, but not without appreciating the joys of life as well. Purim teaches us a similar message. We ought to commemorate the sufferings that we have endured in the past, the violence and persecution that have been wrought against our people. Yet if we focus only on the pain in our history we are left with no positive reason to practice our Judaism. As painful as it can be at times, we must learn to laugh at ourselves and our history. We must find joy amidst the pain.

Purim is Judaism’s attempt to teach us that there is a danger in taking life too seriously. We can commemorate painful memories of our past and take care of the needy among us (through the tradition of giving gifts to the poor), yet what is the point of doing these things if we cannot enjoy life at the same time? It is a powerful lesson that I invite everyone to share together as we commemorate Purim as a community on March 14. Come to remember and to commemorate, but also laugh and to enjoy. Join us, and remember not to take life too seriously.

*B’shalom,
Student Rabbi Josh Herman*

from the Congregation President...

What is a mitzvah? (Plural is mitzvot.) Very often, a mitzvah is translated as “a good deed”. While that is true, it is incomplete when one looks at the root of the word mitzvah. The root is “tsav”, which translates as command. So, a mitzvah is a good deed AND in its strictest sense, refers to those commanded to us in the Torah. (We know that the word is also often used in a more generic sense to include laws, practices and customs that indicate any good deed.)

We commonly accept that there is a list of 613 mitzvot although there are some disagreements on the precise list. The disagreements are due to some slight discrepancies in the way some lists interpret related or overlapping mitzvot. The most accepted list is that of Maimonides who, in his introduction to his book Mishneh Torah, lists all of the positive mitzvot and all of the negative mitzvot, and then divides them into subject matter categories. Of the 613 commandments, there are 248 positive commandments (do) and 365 negative commandments (do not do).

Maimonides begins the list of 613 with these:

- 1) To know that there is a god. Exodus 20:2: God spoke all these words, saying: I am the Lord your God who took you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage
- 2) Not to entertain thoughts of other gods besides Him. Exodus 20:3: You shall not have the gods of others in My Presence.
- 3) To know that He is one. Deuteronomy 6:4 Hear, O Israel: The Lord is our God; the Lord is one.

In our modern world, we often feel societal pressure to reject notions of God and/or God’s commandments. While we all likely have questions about our faith and about God, and perhaps disagree with many of the 613 mitzvot, I believe that as Jews, we have an obligation to try to understand and act according to the laws and precepts—the mitzvot—of our Torah.

*B’shalom,
Bernice*

I'm writing to remind you that the deadline for the Yiddish Book Center's Great Jewish Books Summer Program for teens is March 15, and to urge you to tell the young people you know about this program.

Great Jewish Books—our week-long program of Jewish literature and culture for rising high school juniors and seniors—has exceeded all of our expectations in its impact. Students spend a week at the Center engaging with classics of modern Jewish literature, and all of the ideas and questions that lie therein. They leave here utterly transformed.

One alumnus of the program wrote his college essay about Great Jewish Books, and has given us permission to share an excerpt with you:

"My week at the Yiddish Book Center's Great Jewish Books Summer Program was exhilarating. It was my first opportunity to sit with college professors around a table and experience academic discourse and learning that was thoughtful, impassioned, far-reaching, collaborative, and fully engaging. It was the first time I met other high school students who explored new ideas with the same depth, breadth, and energy that I did....I was struck by the intellectual honesty of the professors and fellow program participants. There was no pretense or posturing, just honest-to-goodness curiosity and passion for learning. I loved that the conversations spilled from classroom to lunch table to dorm."

To hear what more of our alumni have to say about the program, watch the short video about Great Jewish Books at <http://www.yiddishbookcenter.org/great-jewish-books-summer-program>.

Graduates of the program have gone on to Columbia, Cornell, Wesleyan, Vassar, the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, and other esteemed institutions. They continue to pursue their love of literature and their engagement with Jewish culture.

Great Jewish Books launches students on this journey by giving them opportunities to:

- Read and discuss classic works of modern Jewish literature
- Learn from professors from top universities and from prominent contemporary writers
- Develop skills for literary analysis and self-expression that will prepare them for college
- Meet other teenagers from across the country who love to read and who care about Jewish culture
- Live, eat, and play on the campus of an excellent liberal arts college
- Discover how modern literature connects them to traditions and contemporary ideas

Please tell the bright and curious young people you know to apply now for this unique opportunity!

And don't hesitate to call or email me for more information.
